Australia's Future Tax System Review, headed by Treasury Secretary Ken Henry, will map out the future of taxation in Australia for the next generation. Environment, climate change and sustainability are key themes raised in 2008 pre-submissions and now the Henry Review is heading into its public consultation phase.

Green Capital invites you to join our dialogue about what a 'green tax revolution' can look like, to drive accelerated outcomes in combating environmental problems alongside measures such as the CPRS, RET, energy efficiency, transport, biodiversity and other initiatives.

Emerging from an extensive process of consultation and bringing together voices from government, industry, unions, consumer groups and other affected spheres, this event will seek to outline a framework for submissions to the review. It will serve to inform and engage those seeking to understand what taxation changes could mean for them and offer guidance to anyone planning to make submissions to the government in the area of taxation reform.

Join us to explore sustainability history in the making – a crucial governmental review for Australia's economic and environmental future.
